

Milestone

Truth be told, I haven't put a lot of time into this project in the last two weeks. I'm currently on round two of corona scares this month. No results from the person I could have been exposed to yet, but I feel healthy now, thank goodness. That aside, I have made some progress. I've added in and designed the rest of the main pages. They look about the same as the original mock page save for a few working buttons and links. I also started redesigning my database based on the linking tables we discussed during my presentation. I haven't fully built it out yet, but I have a goal of finishing it up by tonight or tomorrow. I think I understand database design a bit more now, but I will definitely be rewatching the course videos and emailing you for advice again when I'm finished. While it isn't implemented yet because the database isn't built, I have some structure set aside for stored procedures as well. Lastly, I started making a few design elements like the logo and finding images, because as always, that's my favorite part. Right now, I'm hoping to have some better footing by the end of the week as things start to slow down.